Ensuring access in a new funding landscape

Individual HE and school partnership programmes have replaced the national structure and standards of Aimhigher, and collaboration between Higher Education Institutions and schools is entering a new era.

In accordance with their 2012-13 access agreements, HEIs are initiating and administering a huge variety of different local and regional programmes and forms of partnership, some for the first time. Severe financial penalties from HEFCE are threatened for those who fail to deliver, and OFFA has the power to prevent non-compliant institutions from charging above the standard level of tuition fees in future years.

Delegates to the conference will hear from HEIs and schools who are pioneering innovative ways of working together, and take an in-depth look at activities and relationships that are proven to be cost-effective and productive. Regional and national consortia and networks will also be present to discuss how to maintain a broad perspective on partnerships in this new funding landscape.

This event will bring vice-chancellors, head teachers and college principals, along with partnership and widening participation managers together to discuss the future of HE and school partnerships.
