Pregnancy and complex social factors

A model for service provision for pregnant women with complex social factors

Description

The care that women should be offered during pregnancy is outlined in NICE clinical guideline 62 ('Antenatal care'). However, pregnant women with complex social factors may need additional support to use antenatal care services. This guideline describes how access to care can be improved, how contact ...

Safety versus innovation

Pregnancy and complex social factors - a model for service provision for pregnant women

- Women with complex social factors are at higher risk of death during or after pregnancy than other women
- They are less likely to access antenatal care or stay in regular contact with maternity services.
- Example recommendation for discussion

Commissioners should consider commissioning a specialist antenatal service for women aged under 20, using a flexible model of care tailored to the needs of the local population

components may include

- antenatal care and education in peer groups in a variety of settings – GP surgeries, children's centres and schools;
- antenatal education in peer groups offered at the same time as antenatal appointments and at the same location (where a range of services can be accessed at the same time)

How could you use your role to innovate practice to improve antenatal care and education for these women?
